[March 13, 2026] My Review Of SpaceHey After 2 Years

I have been on this site for 2 years now! Yesterday, this account became 1 year old. I originally joined in early 2024, took some hiatuses, and have made new accounts. I wanted to recap my experience here, and how the website transformed in that span of time.

Early 2024: When I was merely a baby at coding. Not even a baby for that part, a literal fetus. I only made sense of the code because I guessed what happened. This was when the layouts still had the feature to actually publish one. I remember making my first layout, a banner of Kotone Shiomi from Persona 3, in front of fire. It was awesome.

I don't remember much of the moderation. I know people got banned but that was it. I have never seen people getting banned in front of my eyes in this point in time. I didn't see much gore either. SpaceHey was really alive during this time! I made good friends on my first ever account.

My memory is hazy when it comes to SpaceHey in this time, so I don't have more to say. It was good times though.

Mid-Late 2024: I rejoined around June to check up on things. It was pretty much still the same. I was more active during this time and intelligently guessed my way through code. I also made some more good friends, but I noticed that the layouts seemed to be stuck in time. I didn't really know what happened, thinking people just didn't make layouts anymore.

People got banned more often, either for good or nonsense reasons. There were more underage users at this time, the youngest I've seen at this point being 11. I knew this because they literally made their age public! They were banned after some time, yes, but why not quicker?

Moderation got slightly worse. I used to be friended with someone who made fun of typing quirks and scene people on their blog. I didn't really like them, and hate speech was, and still is, not allowed.

Early 2025: I was really active on here because of reasons! When you have a decent looking profile after joining 1 hour ago, people flock to you quick. There was a lot more variety starting here, but the Windows 7 layout, scenecore layout (you know the one), and the old computer layout fame still remained. People would put so many floating divs to the point where it would merely just be a div museum.

In terms of moderation, I saw more mass-banning. Mod power trips were frequent, and people didn't know what happened when they saw a chunk of their friends missing. It was usually for no reason, or a wrong one. Gore and shock content were bigger than ever, and the only time I saw it taken care of quickly was a with heavily flashing lights profile.

Mid 2025-Now: I'm way more experienced at coding than I was before. I see a lot more handmade profiles, but of course, the top ones are the ones most used. I often wish more people coded their own profiles but I know that might be impossible. Friends that mean dear to me came into my life and I'm happy with that!

Blogs and forums are more full of debate now, which is a double sided coin. On one hand, it shows more opinions. On the other hand the opinions are ass. I'm talking "it's just fiction it can't hurt you so I can continue sexualizing children" things.

In terms of moderation, as you could see, it is bad. Nazi bots came in one time to spam hateful messaging. Porn bots flooded the new people section. Scam accounts are bigger in population, etc. These types of things mostly take over 5 hours to fix. That seems quite irresponsible to me!

Don't even get me started on the power trips! People get banned for no reason even more now, even if they didn't break any rules! I'll be so honest right now; An needs to add more moderators. Moderating a website with a lot of members is hard, yes, but that can be fixed by inviting more! Predators and just general gross people evade bans every time someone gets rid of their account. I've seen 8-12 year olds on here (yes, EIGHT) that put their age smack dab on their about me.

A solution is to stop playing this game of Whack-A-Mole and just deal with them properly. IP ban them! It really is quite simple.

My time on SpaceHey has been great so far, but it'd be even more great for me and everyone here if An got more moderators. Like people, an environment changes over time, but the changes that has happened to this community is not good. Everything will get better if we look on the bright side!

Thanks for reading ^.^
